خلاصه مقاله:

Meaningful units and words in a language constitute the expressive power of that language. Words from monosyllabic are a group of meaningful or functional monosyllabic words that can be used alone. Words are meaningful units or applied linguistics. In addition to the words themselves being meaningful, there are words that alone do not make sense and take on a special meaning when combined with other words. Structurally, they are monosyllabic words or monosyllabic groups. When words are examined in terms of their structure, it is seen that meaningful monosyllabic words correspond in value. In the semantic analyzes performed in poems and texts, when the characteristics of morphemes and their value are examined, it is observed that the semantic-phonetic relations of words are meaningful. Therefore, in the analysis of applied and literary linguistics, it seems that the analysis of texts in terms of their phonetic and value characteristics is necessary. These analyzes are very important to identify the phonetic-semantic relationship of words in language.
