خلاصه مقاله:

The "linguistic context" is a text that emerges from the bond between words and lexical relations, and words find meaning through application in this context. "Collocation," is a purposeful companionship of vocabulary in the linguistic context of the text, which has a significant impact on the formation of the lexical and syntactic system of the language and the induction of the concepts desired by the speaker. In the present study, it has been tried to analyze and study the effect of the linguistic texture of the Surah Ibrahim in the formation and selection of words collocation with the descriptive-analytical method. The analysis of the collocation of the words at the level of nominal and verbal structures and the analysis of the degree of conformity of these associations with the subjects and concepts of the contexts of verses shows that the use of this linguistic technique in surah is quite purposeful and conscious. On the other hand, the necessity of the linguistic context and the implications that the context of the text seeks to convey to the audience has led to the arrangement and selection of these words in the syntax. In addition to presenting new meaning and beyond the meaning of words, the use of these collocations in different semantic domains has created common terminology in the texts. The salience of these collocations in the linguistic context by creating awareness in the audience makes the audience better understand the message and content of the text by analyzing this text phenomenon.
