خلاصه مقاله:

The success of Developmental State in East Asia once again has proved the role of the state in the process of development and shed light on the weakness of Neoclassic theories in their emphasis on the role of the market as a balancing force. One of the necessary variables for the formation of a developmental state is the international context. Like many states in East Asia, the path toward development in post-revolution Iran seems to be through the formation of a developmental state in the context of the existing international system. But the reality is something different. Therefore, the objectives of the present paper are ۱ - to study the relationship between the international context and formation of the developmental state in Iran; ۲ – to study the role of the United States in the process of formation of the developmental state in Iran; ۳ – to study the means the US has employed to block the formation of a developmental state in Iran; and, ۴ – to study the role of Iran`s foreign policy behavior in the formation of the developmental state. The main question of the present paper is what are the international obstacles to the formation of a developmental government in the Islamic Republic of Iran? The main hypothesis of this paper is: International context, US hegemonic status in the international system, and various political and economic obstacles and sanctions imposed by the US have prevented the formation of a developmental government in the Islamic Republic of Iran. The findings of the .research sustained the hypothesis of this study
