خلاصه مقاله:

The spread of the COVID-19 virus is a hazard to public health. The Ottawa Health Promotion Charter is a response to governments' rising aspirations to begin a new global public health movement, and it appears to be a very strong document and a watershed moment in the health promotion movement. It is also regarded as a guide for international, national, and local decision-makers, researchers, academics, and health advocates, and is available in all nations and international organizations. The COVID-19 epidemic can be contained by implementing health promotion methods developed at the Ottawa Conference, such as promoting healthy public policy, creating healthy supporting settings, increasing community action, improving personal skills, and reorienting health services
