خلاصه مقاله:

The current study is examining the effect of age on second language acquisition and acquiring native like accent. In this study, opinions of two groups are analyzed about this topic. First group believes that age is an important element for learning a language and acquiring native-like accent. Second group believes that age is not a substantial factor in learning. Collaboration and neurological factors play an important role in learning a language. Input, psychological, affective, and contextual factors are necessary for acquiring a native like accent.
