Extended Abstract The inherent problem lying with the lack of development in Iranian tourism industry prompted the author of the current research paper to put forward the hypothesis that it would probably be possible to find a solution through comparing the laws and regulations of the Islamic Republic of Iran with those of some developed countries. It is hoped that research projects like the present one can help get this overwhelmingly important industry get moving. For this purpose, the laws of the Islamic Republic of Iran and some developed countries on such areas as visa issuance, customs roles, transportation, cargo and passenger transfer laws, transit insurance and issues related to the judiciary and the courts were compared and contrasted. The current research project ends with an answer to the question: "Can a comparative study of the laws and regulations of the Islamic Republic of Iran and some developed western countries open a way into helping the Iranian tourism industry in order for it to thrive?" To answer the above question, one can safely say that "the laws and regulations of the Islamic Republic of Iran on tourism are thorough in terms of being parts of the Iranian international laws." A proper implementation of such laws, however, can contribute to not only evaluation of laws regarding tourism industry in the Islamic Republic of Iran but it can help introduce new techniques and initiatives in the process of sustainable tourism development. Introduction Specifying laws and regulations that can provide protection for tourists are extremely important since the growth o tourism and an increase in the number of foreign tourists to a large extent depend on the the laws that protect them in the host countries. Iran is now in dire need of revitalizing its tourism industry; this revitalization is not merely for economic gains but more meant to reintroduce Iran to the world community. The current research, therefore, attempts to widen our understanding of tourism laws in order to have a better and a more improved sustainable development. This research also aims to study tourism laws in different parts of the world and if possible introduce the ones that can help Iranian tourism industry. In order to achieve an answer for this research, the following question should be properly attended to: "Will a comparative study of the laws and regulations of developed countries help improve sustainable tourism development in Iran? And can this ultimately lead to the development of the country?" The subject area of the current ... research zooms in on Iranian p
