خلاصه مقاله:

The World Trade Organization is an international organization that regulates global trade rules and resolves disputes between members. The efforts of the United Nations over the years led to the formation of the "Regulations of International Trade", which are the general principles enshrined in the GATT. One of the aforementioned principles is the principle of fair trade. Unfair trade practices may be formed with the intervention of the government, which is one of the types of unfair trade practices of dumping or competitive cheap selling of goods in the international arena, which is one of the examples of unhealthy and illegitimate competition in the trade arena. The field of countries and one of the favorite topics. Although the government may not have a role in determining the price of export goods and the resulting dumping, and the commercial enterprises themselves enter the market at a price lower than the usual price to capture the market of their competitors, but they do so indirectly. . can enact a law to prevent unfair practice. Considering the above contents and also considering the globalization of trade and the expansion of free competition, the importance and necessity of examining the issue of dumping and anti-dumping regulations is revealed. This article is an effort that first examines the regulations governing the International Trade Organization and then tries to prevent and spread this illegitimate practice at the international level by presenting suggestions
