خلاصه مقاله:

Collections have been an intrinsic matter for humans and humans have undoubtedly had taste and talent in collecting objects. In human societies, collections are put together with purposes and values in various forms. One of these methods which have gained people's attention is the museum. In simpler terms, museum can be defined as an organization that collects, documents, protects, exhibits, describes and interprets material evidence and information related to them in the direction of public interests. Welcoming this method, humans have endeavored to secure their cultural and natural heritage. Along with evolutionary changes in the area of architecture, now a day, museums are no longer a place for protection of collectibles. Hence, they can be considered one of the components influential on human social life, cultural development and the industry of tourism. Hence, in this paper while describing concepts and theoretical literature, we wish to evaluate the topic of role of museums in cultural growth and progress of societies and also tourism.
