خلاصه مقاله:

The purpose of the present study is using simulation in motivating students' speaking skill in English for specific purposes. It is a triangulation study and employs five data collection methods, namely: class observation, teaching journal, document collection, open-ended questionnaire and semi-structured interview. The results reveal that the students are highly motivated and they feel that they get enough practice as well as theory. Some kinds of simulations that are effective in English Classes are building company (making business plan), conducting meeting, doing negotiation and presentation. In addition, it was suggested that the lecturer should give feedback to the students, create materials in the form of hard copy and slideshow and provide games and or other activities in the lessons.
